

Rep. Tom Emmer on the first 100 days

Broadcast: April 17, 2023 • Duration: 1:59

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Thank you, Steve. Thank you, Mr Speaker. Thanks to all of the members of the Republican Conference by electing a House Republican majority last November's last November, Americans sent a message to Washington. It's time to put a check on Joe Biden and the Democrats failed agenda, and that's exactly what we've done in our first 100 days. House Republicans not only reopened the house as our speaker talked about the people's house, by the way, not Pelosi's house, the people's house. We passed a rules package to create a more transparent member driven legislative process. We defunded Biden's army of 87,000 IRS agents. We stopped the selling of strategic petroleum oil in our reserve to China. We created the Select Committee on China. We tackled inflation with the Reign In Act. We defended parents rights with the bill with the Parents Bill of Rights Act, and we lowered energy costs with our signature legislation, the Lower Energy Cost Act. Even Joe Biden and the Democrats cannot deny the need for our common sense policies. 88% of the bills we've passed have been with bipartisan majorities, and the president has already signed two of them into law. House Republicans have come together as a team. We've come together as a team to enact the agenda that Americans elected us to enact, and our offense has forced the rest of Washington to legislate along with us, but we've only just begun. So while we've accomplished a lot, there's still a lot of more work to do. Great first 100 days, but they're over. Now we're going to move on to the next, and we're going to continue to keep advancing a positive agenda for the American people. And as we press forward on the tough fights ahead, Americans can rest assured that Republicans in the House are going to continue winning on their behalf. And with that, speaking of winning, our great conference chair, Elise Stefanik.
