JOHN FREDERICKS:

Let's bring in the Majority Whip of the Republican Conference in the House of Representatives. Tom Emmer, my good friend in Minnesota. Tom, you're on with John and Dave Bossie. Tom, thanks for making time for us today.

TOM EMMER:

Good morning, guys. Good to be with you.

JOHN FREDERICKS:

Tom, we got a lot of politics to start, but I told Dave I'm going to go right to football. And Tom, I got to go to the Vikings. And I just want to get your analysis here. So, you have a quarterback by the name of Sam Darnold. Two years ago, he wins 15 games. You guys don't sign him. You don't like him. Whatever. And he gets beaten in a playoff game, so he signs with Seattle. He brings Seattle to a Super Bowl. Stuff happens, Tom. No problem. But the reason why you didn't sign Darnold was because you had this young fella coming up, J.J. McCarthy. That was supposed to be your savior. The next big arm, the next this, next that. Michigan, this and that. So you had him in the wings. And, well, things didn't work out. He had a bad season. So then you ship in Kyler Murray from Arizona. Doesn't watch any film. Plays video games. All kinds of problems in the locker room. Figuring you need a backup. OK, get it. And then, O'Connell, your coach, names Murray, the starting quarterback, before the first preseason game. Can you explain this, Tom?

TOM EMMER:

Well, clearly, Coach O'Connell has a theory about quarterbacks, John. And that theory is, doesn't matter who it is, he'll make them work in his system. And we'll see. You know that the Kyler Murray thing was kind of a Hail Mary pass. His career so far has been about as sweet as a fart in church. He just hasn't really matured into the adult human being that carries all that talent that he's got. And I'm still hopeful for J.J. McCarthy. But what does it matter what I think? I'm a fan. Coach O'Connell keeps plugging and playing, plugging in these new guys and playing them. And you know what? When they want to hit the bank, I think the Wilfs would probably pay them, quite frankly, if Coach O'Connell said, you know, this one's worth keeping. But he hasn't done that. And Sam Darnold, let's give Sam credit. Sam was done. I mean, his career was over. Clearly at the end of his Vikings tenure, he showed you he still was not over the difficulty of playing quarterback with both hands placed firmly around his throat. You know, the Detroit game, the playoff game in L.A., he just absolutely panicked. You don't run backward and get sacked for 25-yard losses. I mean, you're a pro. But he went to Seattle with what O'Connell had given him in the Vikings, a confidence that he didn't have before. And hats off to him. He did great last year, and he won a Super Bowl. Let's hope that whatever Coach O'Connell does this year, you hear me say this all the time, David, we haven't ever talked about this sort of thing. But I say to John, this is the Vikings year, baby. This is ours.

JOHN FREDERICKS:

I told you we'd get him going, didn't I? All right, all right, all right, Tom. Listen, I grew up as a – what were they, the purple people eaters?

TOM EMMER:

Amen.

JOHN FREDERICKS:

Yeah, so I love the idea of the Minnesota Vikings, but it is – it'll be a tough season. Look, if we can, Tom, let's get to talking about why the Republican Party, why Republican majorities in the House and the Senate, but more specifically for you, the House, why it matters to the American people. Tell us why. Based on the platform of the Democrat Party today, why is it that people should turn out and vote for their Republican member of Congress?

TOM EMMER:

Well, it's something, David, we've got to do a better job at connecting with certain age groups, especially, I would argue, the 18 to 35 age group that's being sold this concept of slave states by the Mamdamis and the El Sayeds and Peggy Flanagan now in my state. Why do you want to vote Republican? I give you the main reason. It's because we offer – the policies that we offer will give you the best opportunity to achieve your personal best. The idea – it's almost going back to a time when we were young, when Ronald Reagan pointed out, if you want to take the only thing that government will give you, if you want to take what Mamdami wants to give you, which is a 12 by 12 room and a ration of food every day and enough electricity to keep you warm maybe during the winter, assuming he can actually keep the energy flowing, if you want to take what little he is able to provide you, go ahead. We're Republicans. We're not going to tell you you can't do that. But if you want to achieve that shining city on the hill, if you want to be able to chase your greatest dreams and actually have a chance to reach them, you've got to come with Republicans. And we're going to have to do a much better job in the next couple months, what, 80-plus days. We're going to have to do a much better job explaining what is actually going on in our economy. We are not doing a good job. I was with Michael Rooley in Cleveland, actually Toledo, a week and a half ago. Michael Rooley and his brother's own grocery stores, David, in Ohio. When I said people don't want to talk about the good news in our economy, they just want to talk about the gas prices. I get it. That's what Democrats have. They don't even have a platform other than men playing in women's sports, other than abortion on demand, trans. They call it gender affirming. It's mutilation. But those are the things that they are promoting. On our side, we've got to be talking about, like Michael said, nobody wants to talk about 78-cent eggs in his grocery stores. Nobody wants to talk about ground beef under $2 a pound. We need to do a much better job. We've got to start pointing out wages. Wages are going up. Wages are going up under a Republican Congress and a Republican president. That has not happened. Get ready. It's just beginning. Republicans have got to do a much better job of talking about that, and then we're going to have to show the contrast. They're talking about communism, Marxism. I think somebody pointed it out to me very well. Stop calling it socialism. These guys want to create slave states. Ann Rand said it in 1962. Communism and socialism have the same goal. It is to control human beings, to enslave human beings. One does it at the ballot box, and one does it through muscle.

DAVID BOSSIE:

Tom, it's really remarkable to me that when you and I were younger and you used the word in politics, socialist or socialism, you were branded as reckless and irresponsible because they said, oh, you're just being shrill, and you're just throwing these words out that don't mean anything. And today, the Democrat Party has blown way past socialism to embrace communism. This mandami in New York is destroying that city. The people in New York know it already, even though the bill hasn't come due yet, which it's going to. But if you look at Al Sayed in his race, we must have our candidates talk about the disparity and the differences between these candidates because the American people are going to lock in. They know. They know, I think, the American people in their hearts. If the Democrats take over the House, which we have to hope and pray and work very hard that they do not, but it is impeachment 101 again of this president. Do you agree with that?

TOM EMMER:

I do. It won't go anywhere because I don't see the Senate flipping, even with the complete swing and miss over the last year and a half. But you're right, David. Everything we've been accomplishing stops.

DAVID BOSSIE:

That's right. It grinds to a halt.

TOM EMMER:

Yep.

DAVID BOSSIE:

So let's talk about a few key, if it's okay. I'm going to just, I'd like you to just tell me, I picked a few races to go over with you this morning because these and all of these folks are my friends and I'm supporting them and I want them all to win and I think they will. But I think you describing a little bit about their districts, because I went regionally and I'm going to lead with the great Mike Lawler. How does he pick that lock again and win that House seat and keep it in Republican hands?

TOM EMMER:

Well, Mike Lawler, as you know, David, is a complete political mercenary. I've met two people in my political career that literally sat down with me and said, this is how I'm going to win my race. One was a state representative. That was 40,000 people. The other one was a guy by the name of Mike Lawler in the Hudson Valley that literally has 700,000 plus people and he showed me exactly, through his district, what he needed to do, where he needed to maximize, where he needed to minimize. I watched on his first election night with my wife and I turned to him and I said, I'll be damned. Look at this. He did exactly what he was talking about doing. How does he do it? Well, he's got a D plus one. I think Kamala won his district by one or two points. His district is very swingy, very in the middle. It will depend on the representative. Everybody thinks that it's the outside, that it'll be the war, it'll be this and that. Yes, those have an impact. But keep in mind, and I've taken this position over more than a decade of doing this, almost two, we are 435 members. Each member has a unique piece of geography, and within that unique piece of geography, it has its own demographics. They are all different. We do not set any longer. There will never be, in my opinion, the contract with America again. Communication has changed. The house doesn't drive the message. Instead, we need candidates like Mike Lawler who look and sound and fit their district. We need candidates who understand their district. What are the issues? The one, two, three issues that engage your voters, motivate your voters to get up off the couch and come out and cast a ballot for you. And then they just have to have enough money. They do not have to have the boatloads of cash that these Democrats, slave owners, wannabe slave owners, literally burn in the streets every campaign. You just got to have enough money to get that message out. And what Mike Lawler does is he talks to everyone in his district. He represents everyone. It is not Republican, Democrat, other. It is Americans in his district. Yes, he takes on a Democrat, which is actually kind of humorous to me because the Democrat is still playing by the rules that I'm a Democrat and I'm going to sell just Democrat whatever, where Mike Lawler is saying, I'm your representative. I represent you. I work for you. And he's sincere. The other thing is, you know, and I'll stop, when you sit down with Mike Lawler, you know he actually cares. You know that it's not a show. He cares. He's a passionate believer and a defender of his district, whether it's something that you and I agree with him on or not. And that's what makes him a little bit different. There's a lot of members of Congress, and I know every member of Congress thinks they're the smartest. They got elected and they think they could learn. There's a lot of guys, a lot of men and women, that could learn a little something from how Mike Lawler goes about his business in his district.

DAVID BOSSIE:

And, you know, like you said, not every district is the same by far. But you can disagree with him, but he's likable. And that's, you know, it really goes a long way. Let's go to another great friend of ours, and that's Scott Perry in Pennsylvania. You know, he's just had a tough race every single time, scratches, claws, and wins every single time. What do you think about Pennsylvania, where it's going, that trend, and how he picks that lock again?

TOM EMMER:

Well, I think Scott can. There's no question. But you've just now compared apples and oranges, I think.

DAVID BOSSIE:

Why?

TOM EMMER:

Because, first, the two personalities are different. Mike has a way of drawing you in, kind of like a Pope Francis. Our friend Scott Perry, who I'm a huge fan of, Scott is more like Pope Benedict. He's going to tell you this is what you've got to do, and if you don't, you're going to burn in hell. The reason Scott Perry gets elected, in my humble opinion, is because he works his tail off. He is always who Scott Perry says he was going to be. He tells you what he's going to do, and then he does it. So people, whether they agree with him or not, they vote for him because they know that Scott Perry is going to be honest as long as the day lasts. Scott Perry is going to be straight with you, and he's going to do exactly what he says he's going to do. That being said, he's got a tough race. Unlike New York, and this is the apples and oranges as well, New York's got Bruce Blakeman running. Bruce Blakeman may be able to recreate some of that spark that Lee Zeldin created just a few years ago because you've got Kathy Hochul, who is so God-awful on the other side, and you've got this Mamdani thing happening in New York City. We don't have that in Pennsylvania. Josh Shapiro is a very popular Democrat governor. You've got some issues going on with Fetterman, and the Democrat base is very revved up about the fact that he's not been their radical left-wing nutbag that they thought they were electing. That is going to be a headwind that Scott is going to have to fight very hard, and we're going to have to help him fight very hard. Plus, the gal he's running against, they don't typically get better the second time, but this gal is a communication pro. You can't underestimate her. We're going to have to work really hard with Scott. I have no doubt, though, he will, too. That's just a different environment than what you're going to get in New York, I think.

DAVID BOSSIE:

I couldn't agree more. In Pennsylvania, look, those areas that Scott Perry and others, other Republicans in Pennsylvania, in the Central Valley area, all that Central Pennsylvania, they have a tough job to do here, but they're going to pull these out. I really think you're right about the governor in the state, at the top of the state, being very popular, but I do think that this is going to translate down to those members, and we're going to be able to pull it out. Let's go to Alaska and Nick Begich. Talk about how rank choice voting is going to impact that race.

TOM EMMER:

Well, I think this time, Nick Begich is the one that's going to be dragging the cart with Sullivan and others behind him. Look, Begich is one of my favorites. Neither you nor John probably know that I'm a graduate of the University of Alaska and Fairbanks, so I have some history in the 49th state. Nick, when he ran the first time, there was some bad blood. The Begich name has been known in Alaska since the 70s, if not before, when his uncle, his namesake, died in a plane crash. He ran the first time, and Sarah Palin jumped into the race, and she and Nick, let's just say they aren't exactly close friends, and neither one would drop out, right? It's kind of the situation you just saw in Tom Barrett's race up in Michigan 7, where you had the communist wannabe plantation. Well, I better not go there. You got the communist that's running with the two so-called reasonable candidates. Neither one of them would drop out, right? And so the communist ends up winning. When Nick ran the first time, Sarah refused to drop out. They split the Republican vote, and they ultimately elected a Democrat. The second time, her re-election, the Democrats' re-election, they did the same thing. They fought again, split the vote. The last time, Sarah has moved on, and Nick obviously was elected. Now Nick has a record. That's why I say when you look at Nick Begich, I've watched him. He is brilliant. The guy's a technical guy, and not just in his private life, right, where he was in the technology business, but in his campaigning. I mean, he is a different form of Mike Lawler in terms of how he identifies his voter, and think about Alaska is such a vast state, and it's got less than a million people in it. I think there are somewhere around 800,000 to 900,000 people, and they're spread all over the state. So Nick has a very interesting process. He's a statewide candidate. And now look, Lisa Murkowski that everybody gets frustrated with in the Republican base, Lisa's carved out this kind of, you know, she's a renegade. She's her own brand. People have to just get over it and recognize that this is what she has created over years. Nick Begich is something completely different. He is actually creating a long-term type vision for his leadership, and I think he's going to help Dan Sullivan. I think he's going to help pull that Senate seat across.

DAVID BOSSIE:

I certainly hope and I agree with all of that. Murkowski, she is a frustrating person to the conservative base. Obviously to us across the country. But we all knew what we were getting. Her father, who had that Senate seat for, you know, decades was the same way, very independent-minded and really cut his own path. And she's, you know, kind of taken that to another level, but she gets it, honestly, to be candid with you. And I think we all knew what we were getting. But, you know, look, you know, hopefully there's going to be, and I think we're all working towards that, Republican majority in the Senate, and she'll be a part of that to help get President Trump's agenda to move forward. Let's just talk about one or two others, if you don't mind, and that is Zach Nunn in Iowa, and I'll just give you both, Jay Feeley in Arizona, both fantastic candidates, but in different parts of the country with different issues at play.

TOM EMMER:

Yeah, well, in the order you gave them to me, Zach Nunn, Iowa right now is kind of a difficult environment. Whether you're Zach Nunn, whether you're Joe Mitchell, who's running in the Ashley Hinson seat as she runs for Senate, whether you're Marionette Miller-Meeks, who's down by Iowa State, it's a tough environment. But you look at somebody like Zach Nunn, this is what I was talking about before. You need candidates and incumbents who look and sound like the districts that they're representing. Zach Nunn is an Iowa. Zach Nunn is a military hero. He's a warrior. I mean, if you were going to do a paper cutout of the typical congressman that you would want representing you, it would be of Zach Nunn, right? I mean, the guy is a good-looking, got a great family, and he's in Iowa and he's on the ground. I think he's going to have a tough race. He's got part of Des Moines, as you know, and that's a unique fight. But that's the same thing that Mitchell is going to fight. And I think Ashley Hinson, Dave, if I'm going to play the Minnesotan, we in Iowa have jokes going back all the time.

In fact, David Young, the former representative, once asked me if I knew why all the trees in northern Iowa lean to the north. And when I told him no, he said, because Minnesota sucks. Ashley Hinson, I think, is going to be a pull. I think she's going to pull these guys over the top. I think the governor's race, you know, with Randy Feenstra not the guy, I think that's going to be a difficult race, and that is the thing that gives me some pause, right? Plus, Democrats did a really dirty thing in this thing. I don't know that it's been finally proven, but I think ultimately it will be proven that they sponsored libertarians to get on the ballot in these races to try and siphon away some votes away from Republican voters. I mean, just look at Ohio 9 last time, where we had Derek Marin, who's running again against Marcy Kaptur, the 30-year veteran. Last time, Derek Marin won that race. That's a Trump plus 10.6. He won that race if you take the libertarian out, who took three to four points, he would already be the congressman. So Iowa's going to be a battle. Zach Nunn's the right guy at the right time in the right place. We're going to make sure that he gets over the line. And then Jay Feeley in Arizona won. You know, that's David Schweikert's seat, and David Schweikert has been an amazing representative. I mean, this guy writes code, and he's just brilliant. Sometimes I joke with him that he talks in code, too, and, you know, you just kind of glaze over. It's like, David, I got to try and understand where you're going. I say that because David, much like the description of Scott that I gave you earlier, he has one direction, and it has worked for him. He has regularly gotten over the line by one, two, maybe three points, and he's been great. So this is not any criticism on him, Jay Feeley actually fits this district better than anybody else we could have recruited. Jay Feeley did not want to run necessarily. Donald Trump convinced him to do this. I'm glad he's running because Maricopa County, Maricopa County, you guys correct me if I'm wrong, but I think it's like the 11th wealthiest county in America. These are Republican voters. Jay Feeley is a guy that when you sit down with him, yeah, he's got that pro football resume, all the rest of it, but he's a lot more than a football player. You start talking to this guy, and you realize he was built for this time. He was built for this moment. I think he gets elected this fall, Dave. I think he helps the other candidates, like, for instance, Andy Biggs, who's running for governor in Arizona. These people who like to say, this guy can never win, and that girl is the only one who can win. They are so full of it. I mean, it's got nothing to do with that. Elections are emotional experiences, and it just depends on where the emotions are when you hit those final days as to where this thing's going to end up. And I think a guy like Jay Feeley is going to be a candidate that people in Arizona's 1st District look at and go, I identify with that guy. I relate to that guy. That's a good guy. I'm going to show up. I'm going to support Jay Feeley. And by the way, while I'm doing it, I'm going to support Republicans up and down the ballot. So I love the fact that he's running. He's a tremendous candidate. I've gotten to know him a little bit over the last few years, and he would show up in the darndest places that I didn't expect him to, not because he was running for Congress. This was long before he ran for Congress. And I just thought, what an interesting and, again, very likable guy. And so I hope he wins. I think he will. I'm definitely supporting him.

DAVID BOSSIE:

If we could, could you just tell us how, as somebody who's really looking at the map nationally and looking at these Florida races, which we haven't talked about, are you looking at the redistricting? How does the Calais case, how does redistricting post-Calais, how does that impact us, and how do we keep the House on Election Day, and what does it look like afterwards?

TOM EMMER:

Well, first off, the map redistricting, I think there's 20-plus Democrats who sit in seats now that Donald Trump won in the last election. There are only nine Republicans who sit in seats that Democrats won, and, David, four of those are in California. Very disappointing, but it is a fact. Do you lose all four of those in California? I don't know that you do. Something's going on in California, but we should not be counting on something that is not a sure thing. So I don't know that you lose all of those, but just start with the 21-22 versus 9, all right? Then look at what David Wasserman at Cook said a couple weeks ago or tweeted out. In order for the House to flip, the House Democrats are going to have to flip 57 of 77 seats in the House that go plus or minus 5. I mean, that is a huge, tall order. If you look at the country, I'd guarantee you two right away. I'd guarantee you the seat in Maine that Jared Golden is retiring from that Paul LePage is running it. 76-year-old Paul LePage, former two-term governor of Maine. God bless him. He's decided to come out of retirement. The guy is a horse. He announced he's running, and Jared Golden, who is probably the best incumbent the Democrat House had, announces he's not seeking re-election because his party has gone too far to the wackadoodle left. I got news for you. They were already there. He's a smart politician. He saw the LePage train coming, and he got off the tracks. You're going to win that one. You're going to win Missouri 5. Missouri 5 is the Emanuel Cleaver seat, right? This is the seat through redistricting that has been changed. It is now a Trump plus 18. Rick Bratton just won that primary a week or two ago. Rick Bratton is coming to Congress. I would guarantee you those two. And after that, you've got to look at New York. Like I said, if Blakeman is running a great race, you better watch that closely because he represents Nassau County. He's the highest elected official in Nassau County, about 2 million people. Last election without Trump on the ballot, he was re-elected by 9 points, all right? In a traditionally we're told Democrat part of Long Island. I want you to think about this. Why is it important to you and me? All of New York's 4th District and 3 quarters of New York's 3rd District are in Nassau County. If he is rolling, you could pick up one or both of those. And we've got great candidates in both. In fact, Michael Petri in the 3rd is a 2nd time candidate. Nobody helped him last time because nobody saw that seat as winnable. He came within 3 points last time. The generic right now in the 3rd, I'm told, is R plus 1 and Suozzi's got some challenges. You also got a shot up in New York 22, which is up by Albany. This has a state senator Peter Oberocker running. This is the old Molinaro seat. Josh Riley is not the fastest moving turtle on the beach. He's going to have to work really hard if he's going to hold that seat if Blakeman's running a good race. From there, you'd go to Ohio. You've got a couple seats in Ohio. The Toledo seat, the Cincinnati seat, both Trump's. One's a 10.6, Trump. The other one's a 2.6. I left out North Carolina's 1st District, which is a rematch between Laurie Buckout and Don Davis. I never guarantee when you've got a long-time incumbent in a seat because there's a reason why they've managed to survive for years because they're good at what they do. But this is now a Trump plus 10 seat. That might be too steep a ladder for Don Davis to climb against Laurie Buckout. You drop down. I gave you Missouri. You drop down to Texas. You've got five seats in Texas. I've been talking to Texans all week. What's the feeling on the ground? They're definitely concerned about the Senate race. Not that Ken Paxton's going to lose. They're not worried about that, but they're worried about the energy because Republicans are divided. They've got to come back together because you can't let Tallarico get any kind of draft because it's going to affect the House races. But you could pick up five there. You've got a seat in New Mexico. New Mexico 2 where Greg Cunningham, a law enforcement guy, a sheriff, is running against Gabe Vasquez, the incumbent, who literally is a criminal. He's got a rap sheet. I like that contrast. Then you've got Washington 3. Washington 3 is Marie Gluskamp-Perez. This was Jamie Herrera-Butler, Joe Kent beat her in a primary a couple years back, and then Joe Kent could never win the general election. He ran twice. Guess what? John Braun, the Senate minority leader, is running in that seat. John Braun, I think, is going to walk away with it. I think he's going to win Washington 3. I'll throw you out one last one. In Minnesota, there's a seat that's not on the map in my district. Angie Craig's seat. There's a guy named Eric Pratt who's a state senator. He's not too hot, not too cold. Smart guy. Former linebacker for the University of Colorado. This guy's been around for a while. The Democrats nominated an absolute communist to replace Angie Craig. I don't know. I mean, that could put a seat like that on the map. And there are others, right? There are others that you can look at around the country. I talked about the Tom Barrett seat. Michiganders did him a big favor by putting that Lawrence guy on the ballot. Other than that, David, I don't know much.

DAVID BOSSIE:

That was an incredible rundown. Let me just say, I'm a believer that the Calais case, that Louisiana did our party and our nation an incredible service by bringing that case and then winning it at the United States Supreme Court. And then obviously picking up some of these seats as we are seeing in Florida, which their primary is coming. We're going to see some great candidates come out of those primaries. Picking up a seat in Alabama, in Louisiana.

TOM EMMER:

I was going to say, I left those out. Alabama, Tennessee.

DAVID BOSSIE:

It gives us the opportunity in such a tight Congress. Obviously, you guys, I mean, what you and Mike Johnson and Steve Scalise have done, the successes that you have had in legislatively, in passing things with a one seat some days, one seat, two seat majority in the House of Representatives. When you look across the hill and the Senate isn't delivering the same results, which with a much greater majority, even though it's a tougher group of people to deal with, they should be able to get, if they could do, if their leadership could do what our leadership is doing in the House side, we would have had, in my opinion, a lot more accomplished. And that's what the people are frustrated at. And that's really, to be honest with you, Tom, I think one of the things we're seeing in the polling is the lack of enthusiasm amongst Republicans because they don't see some of those things that they voted for in 2016 and the elections ever since. And I think there's some frustration. We have to tell them and be honest with our base and say, things are going to change and be different in the next Congress. We've done our best. And with these slim majorities in the House and Senate, you can't just do whatever you want. And we all understand it. I think the American people, the base understands that. But I do see that in the polling. And we have to energize our base. And that's what messaging are you bringing to make sure that our base turns up? Because in some of these races that you're talking about, it's going to be the difference. Winning and losing the general election is going to be whether our base turns out or not.

TOM EMMER:

It's mostly Republicans. And I say this to our members, David, so I hope it's not taken wrong by you and John and the listeners. Republicans got to get over themselves. We have these battles. Somebody wins. Somebody loses. And then we have this thing where, well, I'm not going to participate now. Well, look, the other side is playing for keeps.

DAVID BOSSIE:

That's right.

TOM EMMER:

When we're talking about playing for keeps, they don't care if their candidate is fantasizing murder of his opponent and his opponent's family. They don't care if the other side is preaching. We hate America and we need to get rid of Thanksgiving. American football is toxic masculinity. They don't care. Even David Axelrod, who I think is like a brilliant tactician. David Axelrod is like, well, else I add is you know, he he's going to be good. Really, David? He's he really matches the template that you were looking for in the Democrat Party. No, he doesn't. Right. And this is the issue for Republicans. We got to get over it when we can. Paxton wins his primary. I understand there's people that are very frustrated and upset. OK, do you really want a Talladega representing? More importantly, do you want to make it so that you don't pick up all five house seats that you have a chance to pick up in Texas? Get over yourself. Get out to vote. And then it's up to us. I told you at the very beginning when we started talking about this, we got to do a better job of attaching our policy wins to people's lives. I've been saying this now.

DAVID BOSSIE:

That's right. They're criticizing. Let's go back to Romney. Romney's running. And you'll remember he was caught on tape at a fundraiser saying, how can you win a national election when 48 percent or whatever it was, the American public is getting something from government? Well, that was a mistake. I would respectfully say to met. The answer should have been that 48 percent. It's like I started with. You can take that if that's all I can't add speaker labels to this transcript segment because the segment appears to be empty - no transcript text was included in your message. Could you please paste the actual transcript text you'd like me to label? Once you provide the content, I'll identify the speakers and format it with the appropriate labels for **DAVID BOSSIE**, **JOHN FREDERICKS**, and **TOM EMMER****.
