MOLLY:

impact the races and of course what ultimately happens in the House. Joining me now to discuss House Majority Whip Tom Emmer. Good morning, thanks for being with us.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Good morning, Molly.

MOLLY:

This is pretty interesting. To some extent it's you know an inter-party discussion, but what do you make of it? And if Democrats do gain a little ground in the House, what it could ultimately mean for this president's second term? Your thoughts?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well it's very, it's very interesting and this is something that's been coming for several years. You might remember that when the squad, as they've come to be known, Rashida Tlaib, Ayanna Presley from Massachusetts, Ocasio-Cortez, when they got elected back in 2018, they announced as they got sworn in 2019, the socialists have arrived, right? The problem they had back then is that term had a different connotation, so they immediately changed it to democratic socialist. By the way, for those people watching who'd already know this, I'm sorry, but there's nothing democratic about socialism. I ask anyone from Venezuela, Cuban, Cubans in Miami, they know better. But what's happened, Molly? Perhaps from some of these elite universities that have incredible liberal lefties teaching, our young people have started to look at socialism as a different type of term. When I say young, you know, those 18 to 35, but the poll that you showed left out one very important term, communist. I mean, these are not socialists. These people are communists and Marxists. That term, communism actually has a terrible connotation. And what's gonna happen here? The Democrats can write off whatever they want. They're in serious trouble for us. The economy, the perception of the economy because the economy is improving gas prices aside, everybody understands that's related to Iran, and that can have an impact. But the economy itself, Molly, the reinvestment and manufacturing, all the things that are happening because of the big, beautiful bill that was signed into law a year ago. The economy's moving. We need to have the public perceive what is actually happening. That's coming. In the meantime, Democrats, what are they gonna run on? They want to change the socialists who are really communists, want to eliminate the U. S. Senate.

MOLLY:

Yeah, it'll be. It'll be interesting to see what happens if the if the if the group of them grows to some extent, they have more allies in after the election. We'll see what else really happens. But in the meantime, there's also the Trump effect. Full swing. The president's handpicked candidates have also seen some very big victories, particularly this week in Arizona. You know, is this a sign of things to come in November that some of the types of candidates that the president wants to see may also be heading to Washington after November?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, let's let's be clear that Donald Trump's endorsement is it carries. It's like gold. This isn't this election. He's been doing this now for a few years, and you raise a great point because his congressional endorsements, his other endorsements, they are very powerful. And remember what people have been telling this Molly that there's no enthusiasm out there. You know, without Trump on the ballot, those Trump voters aren't gonna show up. We'll take a look at a Harris poll done within the last two weeks. They broke out MAGA Republicans, Republicans, Democrats and independents. They did not slice and dice Democrats with socialists, Marxists, anarchists, communists. They just said Democrats. It's very interesting here in July, because normally in a non presidential year you got an enthusiasm gap. Guess what? The highest number was for MAGA Republicans. Those are the Trump voters. 8 to 9 out of 10 say they are showing up in November. We've been told for two years they're not going to show up. They are. And I think what you're talking about with the primaries, they're already showing.

MOLLY:

Yeah, it's wild to think tomorrow we're gonna wake up 100 days left to continue the fight until November and everyone heads to the ballot boxes. The House just voted to eliminate more than $30 billion in waste and fraud abuse. Almost every Democrat voted against this measure. Why is eliminating, you know, fraud such a partisan issue now?

REP. TOM EMMER:

I for some on the left, I think it's more about you're my enemy and I'm not going to agree with anything that you put up. But then there are others that are true believers in trying to change America as we know it. They'd like to be the ones making every decision for your business, for your family, for your future. We believe in freedom. We believe that people should be able to make their own choices and they should be able to express them. There are people on the left who have voting cards, Molly, that literally want the central authority to make all these decisions. And when it comes to waste, fraud and abuse, it's amazing. Donald Trump and his administration and Republicans in the House and the Senate have been attacking this issue for almost two years, and it's huge. You realize that Hakeem Jeffries, the so called leader of the minority in the House, just started talking about waste, fraud and abuse like they care. I mean, think about this, Molly. Nancy Pelosi. Are you surprised she voted last week against a bill that would reform stock trading by members of Congress? She voted no. These guys are, you know, the American public understands that they are not honest and they're going to pay for it at the ballot box in November.

MOLLY:

Yeah, somehow the stock trading bill never quite makes it across the line. Congressman Bill Emmer, thank you very much. We greatly appreciate you joining us.

REP. TOM EMMER:

It was great to talk with you.

MOLLY:

Chicago Mayor Brendan Johnson is demanding reparations for the ice raids that took place in that city.
