 and we'll get to more of your thoughts, your voice and text messages coming up. But right now, very pleased to welcome to the show Representative Tom Emmer, 0294. And we'll get to more of your thoughts, your voice and text messages coming up. But right now, very pleased to welcome to the show Representative Tom Emmer. Tom Emmer, it's good to see you this morning, sir. Thank you so much for joining, joining the show.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Good to be with you, John.

*JOHN:

 Boy, we were just talking about the events that unfolded yesterday, making national news in downtown Minneapolis. And our continued prayers go out to the law enforcement officers and the victims that were affected by this yesterday, Tom. And I was just mentioning how I was a little taken aback by this receiving national news coverage when I first saw the story, only because, Tom, daily we see stories of shootings, officer involved incidents in downtown Minneapolis. And this just kind of seemed, unfortunately, like par for the course. I understand, based off of the details of why this was receiving national attention. That being said, this isn't uncommon, regardless of the fact that this particular story made national news. But it was tragic nonetheless. And we pray for the officers and their heroic efforts yesterday. Your thoughts on what transpired in Minneapolis yesterday, Tom?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Well, first off, it's just talk about the incident. You have three police officers who sustained injuries. Thankfully, they don't appear to be life threatening. You had people who did lose their life in this incident. Apparently it came from a allegedly it came from an eviction or an eviction that was in process with a tenant who was being evicted, who has a long history of criminal activity. And, you know, I'm not saying this is the case, John, but God forbid that we find out that this guy was released over and over again by, for instance, Mary Moriarty, who seems to care more about criminals than she does about the victims that they that they create. And I would just add that what really bothers me about this, this is why we have to get back to supporting the men and the women who wear the uniform every single day. Those officers left that morning home. They probably are married. They probably have kids. They went out to protect us and they almost had the ultimate sacrifice, which would have been the same thing for their families, John. And you know what? You got to stop the hate cop rhetoric. We got to have Keith Ellison. We got to have Tim Walls. We got to have these prosecutors get back to enforcing the rule of law and recognizing that these are not only very important public servants for our safety, our community safety, but they're our neighbors, John, our neighbors. Their kids go to school with our kids. We go to church with them. Let's celebrate these people. And maybe maybe we can, if we're enforcing the law, maybe we can make sure that tragedies like this don't happen, because people who are inclined to commit a crime like this, such a horrific act, are actually behind bars or getting the treatment that they need. But we don't know yet. We don't know enough of the details. And you and I have talked about tragedies in the past. I don't typically get ahead of the facts, but I couldn't help seeing exactly what you did. I mean, Minnesota in the news and more importantly, Minneapolis in the news for this type of a shooting. Why us?

*JOHN:

 I have a number of different things that I want to discuss with you this morning. We've been talking about this story as well. I got I got buried in the wake of the breaking news yesterday. I imagine there'll be commentary today. I haven't heard from any state officials over their response, but the DOJ moving forward with this new policy requiring states to turn over any information that they have regarding illegal individuals in the state, undocumented immigrants in the state to DHS or they risk funding to particular programs. We know that Minnesota is going to have a lot of information to hand over. They're going to risk losing funding, especially when you look at DFL initiatives like driver's licenses for all. So I await to see what the response is from the Walls administration and others regarding this. But what are your thoughts on this move to withhold potential funding to programs for states that do not turn over data relating to those that would be illegal in their particular states?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Well, we we have a system that's based on a concept of federalism, right? We believe in states rights. We believe the states are allowed to govern themselves. They should. But when we're talking about national security, when we're talking about our election process, when we're talking about just protection of American citizens from those who are here illegally that might cause them harm, the federal government has tried, tried to get the information that it needs to deal with these illegal people. And states like Minnesota, which Tim Walls, you might remember, he tried to come to Washington and say, we are not a sanctuary state. Tim, you have created a sanctuary state. You are a sanctuary state. You thumb your nose at the federal authority every chance you get. I this is just the federal government doing what it needs to do to protect all of America. I if you don't want to cooperate, John, I mean, where does it say in the Constitution that you're entitled to all kinds of federal funds that are collected from taxpayers across the country, especially when you refuse to enforce federal laws on immigration? So it's by the way, I think there's either a court case or there's an opinion that just came out within the last couple of days that says the or within the last week that says the Trump administration, specifically the DOJ, whoever is in the office, they can do this. If you do not want to abide by work with the federal government to provide the information they need, then they don't have to send you federal funds. So I think it would behoove. Tim Walls is you know, he's a lame duck loser. He's on his way out. I think people that care about it need to get him to get over himself. And let's make sure that the the feds, it doesn't have to be the DOJ. Why doesn't why don't you give Mehmet Oz the information he's asking for? Why don't you give whatever the agency is, the information they're asking for, the DOJ, the information that they need? If you're going to get federal funds for law enforcement, John, well, then you should actually support federal law enforcement, right?

*JOHN:

 Absolutely. Absolutely. I was glad to see this move, by the way. I am I am not optimistic at the response of what the state is going to be to this, but we'll we'll wait and see what they have, what they have to say. I, Tom, I want to add something to our previous conversation. I just received further details on the background of this alleged shooter. And apparently going back to 2011, according to Liz Colin and Alpha News, this particular individual had cases involving domestic abuse, domestic assault, drug paraphernalia and purchases. And again, this would be the shooter involved yesterday. And I just wanted to add that in light of the comments that you made before regarding that revolving door of criminality that I talk about so often here on the show, was this an individual that shouldn't even have been on the streets remains to be seen. But clearly he had a criminal background, Representative Tom Emmer.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Not surprising. And it happened in Minneapolis. So the next thing I'd like to know is, was the head of the county attorney's office ever involved with this individual? Look, there's another thing we got a problem with, John, that you haven't even brought up. But our media in the Twin Cities is it just doesn't do the job. You got the Star Tribune complaining about somebody who's openly calling for the assassination of our president. They're saying, oh, it's not fair to dox this guy. The Star Tribune doxes police officers every chance they get. More importantly, I want you to go back because it just reminded me of the case that was decided that was all in the news like two, three weeks ago, that a federal district court judge in Minnesota determined that the Trump administration is not entitled to the voting records that they have requested. Right. The the federal government asked Steve Simon in Minnesota to provide them essentially with their homework. Minnesota administers the federal elections. OK, the federal government's asking Steve to provide his homework. He's refusing. He has forced them to sue him. And they reported they lost to the federal government. Trump lost. You know what? Nobody reported, John. And I bring it up because they talk about doxing and all this stuff, which they do to law enforcement. Has anybody bothered to look at the judge, the district court judge who made this decision? She is a Biden appointee from 2021. By the way, her background, she was a law clerk and an adjunct law professor. She before she was appointed to the federal bench had never tried a case, had never represented a client, had never actually done anything in the real world when it comes to why the legal system, the law. And she's making this decision. I mean, this is how you lose your credibility, not just as the justice system, but as the worthless reporting that we get in the Twin Cities. Thank God for Liz. Thank God for you and people that will at least sound the alarm.

*JOHN:

 Well, and I was talking about this earlier earlier as we continue our discussion with Representative Tom Emmer. You know, if we have a you know, the left likes to use a systemic a lot when it comes to various narratives they want to put forward to push back on Republicans. If we do have systemic problems, but they're not the ones the left points out, do we have a systemic problem of activist judges in this country? Just as you mentioned, there was another judge that ended up going and blocking President Donald Trump's latest move regarding birthright citizenship. And I have no doubt that this is going to get kicked up to a higher court and it will probably end up being overturned. But these judges, they want their five minutes of fame. They want to sit in their social circles with their other buddies saying, look at what we did to Trump. It's pure activism, in my opinion, Tom. So you're spot on with that.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Well, and I've actually seen it firsthand because before I did this job, I actually practiced law and I'll give an example. I go into a Hennepin County District Court. There'd be judges appointed by Rudy Perpich. They're a Democrat governor of the state of Minnesota. Judges appointed by Tim Pawlenty, a Republican governor of Minnesota. And John, these judges, these men and women were experienced in the practice of law. They had represented clients. They had literally worked in the courtroom as a lawyer, not a clerk. Right. They're not like writing motions and such. Guess what? I never felt once like it was a Democrat or a Republican. They were a judicial officer that was administering the law as fairly as they could. I didn't always agree with decisions, but it didn't smack of partisanship. These I mean, I'm sorry. But I looked at all the different outlets to try and figure out what judge would actually say the federal government is not entitled to see your homework to make sure that it was being done in accordance with the law and that it's fair and transparent. By the way, she also brought in the Civil Rights Act. How does that apply, John? Just it's just insane. And nobody in Minnesota with very limited. I pointed out Liz and you very limited. No one will point these absurdities out.

*JOHN:

 No, you're absolutely right. And if they did, I think that we would have a much a much different outcome when it comes to our elections that people were actually given the the proper information before. I let you go this morning talking with House Majority Whip Tom Emmer. Let's thoughts on two different things. We had John Phelan from American Experiment on a couple of weeks ago, and he was expressing his concern over the over the national debt. I know you've been talking about this recently. I know it's one of the GOP priorities. Can you talk a little bit about that? And the other aspect that I want to mention, too, is, you know, your colleagues over in the Senate. We've talked about it a lot. Congress getting back to work at the SAVE Act. So talk about the GOP priorities relating to the national debt, but also the future and the possibility of the SAVE Act to actually moving forward.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Yeah, well, first on the national debt, that that's why I came here. And I feel like we've been running up the down escalator ever since I got here, frankly, probably before I got here. It wasn't until Donald J. Trump and that big, beautiful bill, we made the largest cuts in the history of of the republic. Guess what, John? I said this the other day, and one of the guys that I played hockey with in college emailed me and said, that's a new one that I haven't heard. I've been using it for years. This is like spit on a hot tar road in the middle of July. I mean, you're talking about 40 trillion dollars in debt. Oh, they cut two point five trillion over the next 10 years. Oh, no, that's just the beginning. I literally we're going to be graced after we win these midterms with a president who is beholden to no one. And he has made it very clear that this is the priority. It's not just about more efficient government rooting out waste, fraud and abuse. This is about making sure that we we protect this republic for generations to come and not saddle our children and grandchildren and others with our own debt from today. So the job is far from done. But we showed the will to be able to do it before a midterm. They want to make a big deal out of it. You hear these Democrats going, oh, they cut snap. Really? What we did is we tightened up work requirements so the states could no longer give illegal aliens food stamps. OK, that that saved us six hundred billion dollars over 10 years. So you think it's not a problem on Medicaid? We did the same thing. We tighten the work requirements because Medicaid benefits should be going to those people that need the Medicaid benefits. They shouldn't be allowed to scam these systems. And it's a it's that and then the Save America Act and our friends at the Senate. I look, John, I've said it before. I'll say it again. Don't know if you and I talked about it, but there are no Republicans or Democrats. There are only senators. Both sides use the filibuster and the parliamentarian, in my humble opinion, they don't have to agree with me, they can be mad at me, but they use it to avoid taking votes that are uncomfortable. If you think about it, the Save America Act, when they were all leaving town, they voted on a voter ID bill that they had already passed once before because everybody was comfortable taking that vote. I they're not taking the Save America Act, even though like 75 to 80 percent of Americans at this includes Democrats, Republicans and other believe that it is a reasonable thing for someone to establish that they are indeed a legal citizen of the United States who is entitled to vote at some point in time when they register and then when they show up to vote. This same 75 to 80 percent of Americans believe it's reasonable to have to show a photo ID in order to cast a ballot. You got to tell me, John, how you can't pass an 80 percent issue through the United States Senate. Yeah. And by the way, the other thing you got to tell me, just you don't just say no. Tell me what we need to adjust so that we can get your vote. Because 77 million people voted for this agenda and they're standing in the way of it.

*JOHN:

 Representative Tom Emmer, thank you for the time this morning. Did you get a chance to make it out to the Minnesota State Fair?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 I don't know. You know, I am rolling again and I believe we're going to I believe we're going to be there over the weekend because I've been in I've been in D.C. this week. So,  well, it certainly has not been Emmer weather here. It's still pretty warm. So I just want just a warning. I don't know how things are in D.C. right now. So it's just a cold, cold, cold.

*JOHN:

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Yeah, the cold months are almost here. I'm sure you're excited about that. Get you lathered up before October. Here it comes, baby.

*JOHN:

 Representative Tom Emmer, thank you so much for the time this morning. It's great to talk with you and to see you. I appreciate it. And hopefully we can do it again next week.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Same, John. Be well.
