

Rep. Tom Emmer on Live

Broadcast: September 27, 2026 • Duration: 5:17

MIKE:

With those critical midterms less than 40 days away, both Democrats and Republicans are celebrating their own small wins among voters in battleground states, and the GOP works to retain their majority. Who better to talk to than House Majority Whip Tom Emmer of the great state of Minnesota. Congressman, welcome.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Good to be with you, Mike.

MIKE:

I want to play some sound from Senator John Kennedy, who always has a colorful way of looking at things. And then I'll get your reaction to it, sir.

SENATOR JOHN KENNEDY:

OK, here's my prediction for the midterms, Mark. The experts will be wrong. They almost always are not. None of these guys have ever run a campaign in their natural lives. It's going to be close. It would help if the president would stay focused on cost of living. And I would like to see him give a nationwide address or let Rubio and General Kane do it and explain why we went into Iran, why we're winning.

MIKE:

What are you seeing as you travel district to district to help your colleagues?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, obviously, Mike, I'm focused on the House. We have 37 days from today and I'm going to hit another 56 districts between now and Election Day. So I am seeing the ground and I can tell you this, Mike, I can tell you the polling. This is where the senator I agree with. The polling is you can't accept it. I'll give you an example. Just within the last week or two, you had a Marist poll and you had an Emerson poll released on the Iowa Senate race involving my friend Ashley Hinson. The Marist poll released the same day as the Emerson poll had her down by three points and the Emerson poll has her up by two. I think the place that we all can agree it is going to be close no matter what. And I actually like our chances in the House, Mike. The map is very favorable to Republicans, even with a headwind. Plus, unlike U.S. senators, unlike gubernatorial or other statewide races, Mike, we're representing our members represent a specific piece of geography with a unique set of demographics to that geography. If you have the right incumbent, if they have the right message and if they have enough money to do what they need to do, they can fight through the downward pressure from a national message, which I believe our guys are doing.

MIKE:

What would you say to some Republican voters who may be frustrated about the Iran war or affordability who might be considering sitting this one out?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Look, I first off, that's unacceptable. The problem with midterms is usually the party in the White House. The voters are happy because they got what they wanted. In this case, you got a sealed border. You don't have illegals coming across the border anymore. You've got a president who is a law and order president. You've got the lowest rate of crime and specifically violent homicides in 100 years. You've got the greatest tax cut that's ever been passed, made permanent. All of these things. That being said, my four dollar gas and six dollar diesel is unacceptable. Remember, Republicans and Donald J. Trump have been trying to fix the mess that Joe Biden and Democrats created just a little bit more than 18 months ago when he took when he took control of the White House. And I'll just finish it with we all agree four dollar gas, six dollar diesel unacceptable. We're working on it. But it's not enough to vote for a communist, Mike.

MIKE:

Well, we see a divide on the other side where you have those Democratic socialists fighting for control with traditional Democrats. Does that help the GOP?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Yeah, well, first off, Mike, there's nothing democratic about socialism. These are not democratic socialisms. That is their creation that unfortunately, I think our journalists all repeat. They are communists. They are Marxists. They are anarchists. And yes, they are in a serious fight with just the left of center Democrat Party. That was my grandfather's party. And that's going to be a problem for them. They are not offering candidates to fit Main Street America. That's only going to benefit Republicans. But it's going to be close, Mike. People have to get up, go out and vote. If they don't show up, we're going to have a problem. If our people show up, we're definitely in the game.

MIKE:

We're nearly out of time. I know you're a house guy, but you're also a Minnesota guy. Does Michelle Tafoya have a shot in that Minnesota Senate race?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, absolutely. She's running against the lieutenant governor who has been at Tim Wall's side while they have been administering fraud in Minnesota to the billions of dollars, whether it's Lear Learning Center, Learning Center, daycares, autism, fraud, housing fraud. She's been right there for plus she's just a whack, whack, nut, left wing, crazy Michelle Tafoya. Michelle Tafoya is America. She's kind of a common sense gal next door that just says it the way it is. I think Michelle Tafoya has a serious chance of surprising people here in Minnesota.

MIKE:

He's all fired up. House Majority Whip Tom Emmer, thanks so much for your time. Safe travel, sir.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Thank you, Mike.
