KEISHA:

Well, it's great to be with you, Keisha and Mark.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, it's great to be with you, Keisha and Mark. I think it's going to be a big part of the vote today, and it's going to be a big part of the election come November. You're right. Minnesota is the poster child. We've got 5.7 million people. We're talking about $9 billion in fraud or more that has been built out of the Minnesota taxpayer. This is going to be a huge issue going forward, and quite frankly, the people the Democrats are putting up, whether it's the Amy Klobuchar, who they think is going to work because it's not too hot, not too cold. She's just right. Amy has put out a hundred-fold press releases in the last two years, Keisha. Not one of them mentions the fraud, waste, and abuse that has been discovered under the Tim Walz administration. So this is going to be a major issue. It's one that Democrats in Minnesota just don't want to address.

MARK:

So Congressman, there was an article from The Guardian which outlines the uphill battle that Republicans face to make inroads within Minnesota. It says the state leans Democratic. It has not elected a Republican statewide since 2006 when Tim Pawlenty won a second term as governor. A Republican presidential candidate has not won the state since 1962. Still, as you mentioned, Republicans hope to seize on fraud problems in state programs, including criminal cases against a sprawling group accused of organized theft of meals for children. Look, we've seen that the Democrat Party drifts farther and farther to outright socialism. That may sell in the Twin Cities, but I'm not sure if it happens in rural Minnesota or up on the Iron Range. Are there enough people to pick common sense over crazy?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Yeah, I mean, Minnesotans, Mark, the ones that I know overwhelmingly are tired of being the embarrassment in the country. People don't like traveling and having to say, well, I'm from Minnesota, and then being the receiving end of all the fraud talk and everything else. Tim Walz has been an ultimate embarrassment. But let's address what you just said, because Minnesota doesn't necessarily lean, as they say, Democrat. In fact, if you look at the 2024 presidential heat map, it is overwhelmingly red. There is a blue dot essentially in the in the Twin Cities. Yes, that is true. And there's a blue dot in the northwest angle where there's more moose, I would argue, than people. But that spot in the Twin Cities is not 100 percent Democrat. It is probably 54, 48, 50, 54, 46, 52, 48, somewhere in there. The issue is when you look at Tim Walz, when he got reelected four years ago, Mark, do you know that he only won 13 of 74 counties in the 87 counties in the 74 that he lost? He got 37 percent of the vote, which includes his former congressional district. The key is the 13-county metro, which has a lot of Republicans that live there. The problem is most of our people get their information locally and they don't, you know, the independents don't start waking up to the election until after Labor Day. And by then, if you haven't gotten the message out about the fraud where, you know, the Minnesota Tribune, which is the main paper in this state, is run by Tim Walz, former Commerce Commissioner. They don't hold anyone accountable. So Republicans got to do a better job of making that clear. And I do think our candidates, when we come out of the primary today, Mark, I think our candidates will have a stretch run here to November, where that will be the number one issue. If you vote for a Democrat, you're going to get more of the same waste, fraud and abuse. Time for a change in Minnesota.

KEISHA:

Well, from a broader perspective with Emmer, how much of a threat do you think that the socialist rise is to the Democrat Party as a whole?

REP. TOM EMMER:

I think I think my grandfather, who was a proud Democrat, I think his party is dead, Keisha. I say it is the Marxist communist. I mean, I think we do them a favor by referring to them as progressives or democratic socialists. Let's be clear. There is nothing democratic about socialism. This is I think some great author that you would both be familiar with said socialism and communism are about the same thing. They're about controlling people, period. One is done at the ballot box and the other one is done by force. This is essentially what Americans are now going to face in New York, where the Mamdami taxes are going out to homeowners right now. They're getting taxed more for owning private property. The promises are not going to be backed up with reality. That's going to be the demise of the Democrat Party, period. Which I don't know how you bring it back. Plus, you look at this Al Sayed. This guy's now talking about football is not being a good thing because it's toxic masculinity. And look, these guys are not they're anti-American. And what's going to happen? That party is gone way, way off the rails and they are going to pay for it at the ballot box. Remember, they're winning primaries right now. It's the general election that's going to determine the future of this country.
