CHERYL:

joining me now is House Majority Whip Congressman Tom Emmer. Congressman, good morning and it's great to have you here. You're going to be speaking at the convention. So what is your message to voters and what can we expect over these next two days?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, great to be with you, Cheryl. And this is a historic event. People are coming from all over the country, obviously from my home state of Minnesota and elsewhere for this historic convention. And the message is pretty simple. The message is about the choice. You know, we talk about a contrast election. It is literally the free market, economic freedom, liberty, etc., versus communism, common sense versus communism, Cheryl. And it's a pretty stark contrast, especially when Democrats are putting up communist candidates like El Sayed in Michigan, who believes that we deserved 9-11 and says things as foolish as NFL football is an example of toxic masculinity, and the list goes on and on. I like our chances in November, not just because of the success, which I think you talked about in your last segment, with the jobs growth that we are starting to see take hold in this country, with the economic growth that's on its way. It's arriving very quickly, but also because the other side has just doubled down on crazy insanity and communists. And I expect that we're going to hear a lot of that messaging tonight and tomorrow, that socialism is on the agenda for the midterms.

CHERYL:

Yeah, well, please, let's not call it socialism.

REP. TOM EMMER:

That is a game of the left. This is like calling them progressives for 100 years before now, when in fact they were exactly that. They were socialists and they were communists. These guys that are running now, like the example I gave you with El Sayed, they are communists. There's nothing democratic about socialism. And that's the way they try to do this with word games. Democratic socialists. No, I tell you what, Cheryl, these are communists and we need to call them out for what they are. We need to show America what's at risk in this November 3rd election.

CHERYL:

REP. TOM EMMER:

That's where that's where I was going to go to start with, Cheryl. You beat me to it. It's not the last two weeks were not canceled. We have advised our speaker has advised our membership that votes are not expected in the last two weeks of the month unless the Senate does something. I mean, literally, the House has done its job with margins of one vote many days. We have passed almost 800 pieces of legislation, over 600 of them, including the Save America Act, including the the N.D.A.A. Annual National Defense Authorization Act, all kinds of things. The ag bill, the farm bill is sitting over there. Over 600 of them are sitting there. So we're going to pass a whole bunch of stuff you watch that is important to the American people. We'll do that in the first four days of this week and we'll get out into our districts and we will continue in our districts unless and until the Senate passes one of these major things. And then you'll see us come back while they're coming back next week. So we'll see what happens.

CHERYL:

I've got Ashley Davis on set to get a question for you.

ASHLEY DAVIS:

Hi, Congressman. So nice to see you. I mean, here's my big question, which I'm hearing. First of all, I'm very happy you guys go home because my life depends on on your schedule. But what is how do we beat back the Democrats bringing up a war powers vote? I mean, I'm assuming even next week we've got 40 members, maybe 20 on each side that are staying home in their districts and won't come. And so that really puts the numbers super quick. And I'm hearing a bubble up that the Democrats are going to try it again.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, first off, great question, Ashley. But there are procedural requirements just because you file a to have a vote. A privileged motion is what that would be. There are certain deadlines and we won't be around by the time that deadline comes due. So the first time it would be addressed would likely be after the elections in November 2nd when it comes to a war powers act in the House, unless you're going to get a a action of the entire Congress. It's it really is more of a political stunt than anything else. But truly, it is the right way to be looking at the at the Constitution. It's just it's being done for political reasons. Otherwise, it would have it would have happened long before. Now, we would have been hammering on this over and over and over again. But you only see it come up here and there. And now right before the House and the Senate are both on the campaign trail for the month of October, they're doing it again. So, well, I don't know that you have to beat it back because it won't come. It won't become right in time to have that vote.

CHERYL:

Well, I had Senator Cramer on with me a week before last, and he said that everything's going to be done in the lame duck session. So that's after the midterms. And that's that's Senator Cramer. So we shall see. I want to ask you about this because it's all about affordability right now. Americans are focused on the economy heading into the midterms. The country currently over 40 trillion dollars in debt. Florida Senator Rick Scott joined me on the program yesterday. He's emphasizing how important it is for Congress to cut spending. Watch.

SEN. RICK SCOTT (CLIP):

They pass a lot of good things this year. They've done everything. They've done a lot of things to try to reduce spending, get things under control. Ron Johnson is busting his butt as the new budget chair to try to get something, get a framework to, you know, one, reduce spending, move to a balanced budget, get everything we can on election security and reconciliation bill. We all have to come together. I don't see how we're going to get this done if we don't if we we only work two and a half days a week and we're only there three more weeks before the election. We've got to get people reason to vote for us. We've got to get election security. We've got to get this cost down. That's what we have to get done.

CHERYL:

You know, Congressman Senator Scott gave the House credit for all you've been able to accomplish. But talk about spending 40 trillion in debt. Can we get that down?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Look, I've said this before. We had a record, record cut in spending with the big, beautiful bill a little bit more than a year ago. Two point five trillion dollars. But, Ashley, it's like spit on a hot tar road in the middle of July in Minnesota. It's going to mean nothing. We've got to finish the job, which means we've got to get these midterms behind us. And with President Trump and Republican majorities in the Senate and the House, the senator, Senator Scott, is dead on correct. We've got to go at this, this issue in a very direct way, because it's not just about today. It's about generations to come. Now, this is why we had Doge come in a year ago.

CHERYL:

Congressman Tom Ember, it's always great to see you. Thank you for being here.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Thank you.

CHERYL:

All right. We'll be watching all of you today down in Dallas. We've got a lot more.
