DAGAN:

guest has been at the forefront in Congress working with the Trump administration to weed out waste, abuse, and this massive amount of fraud. House Majority Whip Tom Enmer. Great to see you. Congressman, Majority Whip, I'm just looking at these comments from Hakeem Jeffries, baseless and illegitimate, a vendetta, says Senator Chris Van Hollen against the Southern Poverty Law Center. Chuck Schumer, a vindictive campaign. We know one thing. If President Trump wasn't the president, we would never know about the depths of this fraud, this malfeasance, this theft.

REP. TOM EMMER:

I totally agree with you, Dagan. Good to be with you. We are very fortunate to have a president who's decided to take on the waste, fraud, and abuse. And it started with just everyday, regular waste, fraud, and abuse here in the federal government. But it has been carried over into Minnesota and California and beyond now, as you're seeing. And there are billions and billions of dollars of fraud. You opened up this segment talking about daycare fraud, talking about, you didn't mention marriage fraud, Medicare fraud. Now we have donor fraud through ActBlue. And I'll tell you what. I think the one thing that you and I can agree on is the Democrat Party of today is now the party of fraud. And by the way, every Republican out there should feel totally vindicated when it comes to the Sovereign Poverty Law Center, because we have been saying for years that they have been on the left, fomenting violence and hatred. And now it's coming to light that that's exactly what they've been doing.

DAGAN:

OK, so we used a metaphor to describe this, and I agree that the administration has been awesome in identifying this going after it. We use the metaphor of weeding out, which is good, because if you want to get rid of a weed, you've got to get it out by the root so it doesn't come back. Here's my concern. There's going to be a lot of good work done here. You're going to close some hospices. You're going to close some leering centers, right? You're going to go after ActBlue. But then you're going to get another administration come in, whip, and they're just going to start watering the weeds again. What are you doing to make sure that can't happen in the future?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, I think the transparency, the exposure that you're seeing. By the way, let's back up. We did a lot of it last summer with the big, beautiful tax cut bill, as the president now calls it, when we put in reforms to the SNAP program, when we put in reforms to the Medicaid program, trying to tighten up and eliminate fraud. In fact, the reforms on the SNAP program were so large, they were talking about $200 billion in savings. But now you and I are talking about something that's a lot, it's much dirtier than even that. That is tightening up the rules so people can't take advantage of the programs. We're talking about people who purposely schemed to steal money that was intended for people that need it. Single mothers for children of disabled children, the elderly. These people have been stealing us blind for years. In my state, it's the poster child of it. And what do we get? They laugh about it on the other side. You got Tim Walz, you know, going on Jimmy Kimmel last night, and these two are having a bromance. A couple of absolute left-wing losers laughing about the fraud, making fun of the violence against law enforcement in Minnesota. This is what the Democrat Party has become. And Brian, I think just exposing it, and starting the investigations, you're never going to be able to close this door again, because people have suspected this for years. I will tell you this though, the one thing I hear at home, some people got to be held accountable and they got to start going to jail. People at home are sick and tired of the Washingtonian fraud crowd getting away with it and walking off into the sunset.

DAGAN:

Well, you teed up this delicious little clip of Tampon Tim sitting down with the infinitely unfunny Jimmy Kimmel. Just take a listen, everybody. It happens in other states. We were going back to many of these people were prosecuted in 2021. He used it as an excuse because it was a perfect thing to do to say there was fraud. Can you imagine that? You know, coming from this guy, he would know fraud where it was at. Just again, it's like they act like it's everywhere and it's not. They are the party of fear equals control and control equals power and stealing money from people who need it or destroying your livelihood by destroying your good name.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, clearly, Tim Walz, his political career is over, Dagan. We're going to have to suffer this fool for just a few more months. I mean, nobody really wants to talk to him in this country anymore. He had to go to Spain to talk to a bunch of Marxists over the weekend with his hateful Trump hating rhetoric. But it also shows us that Jimmy Kimmel is not long for this thing either, because if that's the kind of guest that he's going to attract to his unfunny show, people aren't watching him. And there's a reason why they're not watching. These guys aren't talking to mainstream America. Mainstream America loves this country. They love what this president is doing for this country, both here at home and around the world. And you know what? They're smarter than these academic elites, self-proclaimed academic elites, give them credit for. And you're going to see that, by the way, in the midterms. I firmly believe that we're going to do well in the midterms, despite what everybody wants to believe.

BRIAN:

All right, real quickly, Whip Emmer, the House is going to take up DHS funding next week. Tell us how that's going to go. What are we going to see?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, we've got to talk about the fact that this is nothing more than a spending bill, because we've got Democrats in the Senate who refuse to fund the Customs Border Patrol and the Immigration and Customs Enforcement pieces of DHS. So they pulled those out of the bill in the middle of the night with nobody on the Senate floor, unanimous consent. They sent it over to the House. We rejected it to start with. We now find out we have an existential problem when it comes to funding. The President's been taking care of it, but they're going to run out of funds at the end of the month. So the House has no choice but to act. The Senate thankfully did their job last night, sent over a budget resolution that funds those two pieces. And I think what you'll see next week, Brian, is you'll see that budget resolution come to the House floor, get passed, and then the remainder of the DHS funding will get done. And Republicans will have saved the day in spite of the fact that Democrats don't give a darn about American safety.

BRIAN:

Nope. Great to see you, sir. I can't top that. I can just say, you're right, sir. Yes, indeed. House Majority Whip Tom Emmer, a pleasure. Thank you again.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Thanks, guys.
