Broadcast: 2026-04-22 • Duration: 10:24

JOHN:

Good morning, Tom, how are we doing this morning, sir?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Great, John. Good morning to you.

JOHN:

Unfortunately, Ms. Omar is a problem. She's been a problem for a long, long time. And she's under more scrutiny than I think we've ever seen her under. And she seems to be making moves, at least in my opinion, Tom, because she identifies the level of investigation and scrutiny that she's under. Is there a timeline on any of this that you can share with the listener this morning, talking with Representative Tom Emmer, as we look into this changing of her finances and the downplaying of how much money she is worth?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Yeah, look, before I get there, let's just make it clear. Ms. Omar is a fraud-enabling, racist anti-Semite who espouses lies every day. She's entirely unfit to be a member of Congress. And my colleagues on the House Ethics Committee are actively reviewing this. There are other authorities that have been reviewing this for months. I tend to agree with you, John, that she is reacting to the level of scrutiny she's under, because she's a very arrogant liar. This gal believes she can get away with playing the victim on national TV and taunt our president with her hateful comments. And then she goes to the University of Minnesota and essentially calls on violence to Jewish students and never gets accountable by anyone in the Minnesota press, except people like you. I mean, it's just amazing to me. So look, this disclosure, John, was filed months ago. Months ago. I was talking to the White House about this back in December. If this truly was just an accounting error, John, why didn't she take care of it right away? She makes it sound like, oh, I just glanced at my disclosure, and it went out it was an accounting error. Well, as I mentioned yesterday, perhaps her accountant is a graduate of the Learing School, right? Because this guy or gal is either incompetent or they're complicit. And for her now, months later, to suddenly file this incredibly, I mean, you're going from $30 million of a high to less than $100,000, which, by the way, is already almost doubling what her net worth was just two years ago. So there's something that stinks to high heaven, as usual, when it comes to Ilhan Omar. And you asked for a timeline? As soon as possible. But they're going to do the investigation. Everyone's entitled to that. And if this gal is complicit in any way or is benefited in any way, she should help. And by the way, that goes for marriage fraud, too.

JOHN:

I want to kind of lightening around a number of different issues. Because there's several things that I want to get your thoughts on this morning. So let's move off of Ilhan Omar. And I would love to get your thoughts on that bombshell indictment announced yesterday by the Assistant Attorney General Todd Blanche and Kash Patel on talking about the Southern Poverty Law Center. We've been discussing it in the first hour of the show. That this organization, whose sole purpose, they said, was to track hate groups, has now been indicted by a grand jury for funneling some $3 million to unsurprisingly hate groups. Tom, what are your thoughts on this indictment?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, let's just expand it. Because I think this is just the beginning, John. The Democratic Party is a criminal enterprise. At Blue Employees, in front of Jim Jordan's committee, took the fifth in house depositions 146 times in their probe on alleged donor fraud. I mean, think about this. The left was actually funding white supremacists who Biden and the FBI were telling all of us were the greatest threat to this nation. The same people, and this is where the Southern Law Center comes into play, the same people around whom the false flag operation of January 6th was created and heavily infiltrated by the FBI and filmed, by the way, by Nancy Pelosi's daughter. I mean, this is just the beginning, I believe. This is the tip of the iceberg. This president, this administration is literally pulling back the curtain on years of Democrat abuse of the Constitutional Republican freedoms, using the machinery of government and the NGO process in the Southern Poverty Law Center, all of these different things to advance their false narratives. I mean, this all starts with Russiagate, right? I mean, it's been going on for years, but I think the unwinding of this criminal enterprise started with that criminal attempt by Adam Schiff and Nancy Pelosi and Hillary Clinton to paint a picture that just wasn't true about our president and his family. So it's high time. I think this is why Americans, regardless of their political persuasion, have been so disgusted with their representative government.

JOHN:

So there's a legal challenge that's now pending before the Virginia State Supreme Court. However, yesterday, Virginia voters did approve this redistricting referendum in Virginia that would potentially give Democrats a 10 to one advantage in congressional representation. Now, the Virginia Supreme Court, I'm talking with Representative Tom Emmer, they said they deferred until after this election was over. They said they wanted this election to take place before they weighed in on this. Expectations on how this Virginia Supreme Court may end up ruling on this. And if they end up ruling in the way of Democrats, how impactful is this going to be regarding the upcoming midterms?

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, it makes it more difficult, without a doubt. I mean, look, John, we needed to beat them at the ballot box, in my opinion, because I don't trust the court on this one. I think the court, when they make a statement like that, I worry, I'm concerned about the fact that they wanna be able to say, well, this people have spoken, right? By the way, it was a completely dishonest question. And the more people learned about what was really going on, the more they turned against it, which is why this thing was decided by less than 100,000 votes last night. So do I count on a victory in the Virginia Supreme Court? I don't know. I never, there are people involved in that decision. If they're applying the law, absolutely. I mean, these guys violated their own constitution every step of the way, and they just ignored it. There was a TRO that told them to stop moving, and they just kept right on going, because they have no respect for the rule of law. They have no respect for the courts. And why should they, when the court's not gonna exercise its authority? The only thing that I wonder, and I am talking out loud, thinking out loud right now, is because the US Supreme Court typically defers to the state when it comes to its own election laws and how it runs its elections. But in this case, I believe they violated their state constitution. So it would seem that there may be a possibility, and we'll find out, I'm sure, in the next few days, there may be a possibility that this would be a jurisdiction, within the jurisdiction of the US Supreme Court to determine whether or not they violated their own state constitution, which they have. It's just no doubt they have. But it's so clear when you look at it. To have them just plow forward, John, why should I have confidence in the system?

JOHN:

Just about out of time, Representative Tom, everybody, I wanna ask you, talking about votes, though. Tomorrow on the show, I'll be speaking with Representative Pete Stauber. We're also gonna have our adopted senator from Wisconsin, Ron Johnson. I'll be asking them about this as well. But where do things stand in Congress regarding the Save America Act? I know there were more calls by some Senate Republicans to do something regarding the filibuster. I'm just curious if you can give us an update on where the debate stands on this all-important issue that needs passing before the midterms.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Well, I was with the Senate whip last night, John Barrasso, from Wyoming. And I was giving him a hard time about the filibuster, which he handled very well. He tells me that there will be more attempts to move the Save America Act. But he also points out that there's such a division over there that it's gotta be the right play. And right now, basically what they're disagreeing on, as I understand it, is whether or not to put it on reconciliation. And you really can't do that and be successful on this one because, well, unless he can get the votes, because we could do it in the House in a heartbeat. But he's gonna have to get four or five of their members who have been reluctant to bring that into the discussion. And that's the issue, John. We do need it. There's no question. I mean, look at Minnesota. Minnesota, you administer federal elections, right? You're in charge of how you run elections in Minnesota, but you are also administering federal elections for the president, for US senators, for US representatives. The federal government is entitled to your homework. They're entitled to see the data, the voting records. And guess what? Steve Simon, refusing to provide it still, forcing this matter to, I think he's just delaying. It's a delay tactic used in the courts because he doesn't wanna show his homework because, obviously, he's got something to hide. Otherwise, he wouldn't have provided it. This is why the SAVE AMERICA Act is so important to Minnesota and, frankly, to the rest of the country.

JOHN:

Representative Tom Emmer, as always, I appreciate the time. I hope you have a good rest of your week, and I look forward to talking with you again next week.

REP. TOM EMMER:

Thanks a lot, John. Have a great day.

JOHN:

Yeah, enjoy this wonderful weather.
