*HOST (STUART):

 House Majority Whip Tom Emmer joins me now. Congressman, you're from Minnesota. If she's not going to be subpoenaed, how will she be held accountable?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Well, thanks for having me, Stuart. And yes, it's sad that the culture of corruption that's been developed under Democrats and the leadership or the incompetent leadership of Tim Walz and Keith Ellis and our Attorney General and this Representative Ilhan Omar is staggering. The next step would be, and by the way, the thing that Mike Tobin didn't have is Democrats in Minnesota are saying not just that they believe fraud is political theater, but they're saying that the feds, the feds, if there is something illegal here, we'll find it. So it's very interesting, Stuart, that on the one hand, they don't want the federal government involved in Minnesota. They want to fight anything that Donald Trump, our great president, tries to do. But now when it's defending a corrupt politician, Ilhan Omar, now they want to rely on the feds to actually do the investigation.

*STUART:

 Got it, Congressman. Minnesota Senator Amy Klobuchar calling out Tim Walz in her campaign for governor. She's promising to, quote, do things differently from Walz. On the campaign trail, the senator seems to be running away from the governor. Is that accurate?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 It's more than accurate. Amy Klobuchar has said absolutely nothing about the billions of dollars of fraud in the last year. Not a word, despite the fact that the acting U.S. attorney last fall announced that the fraud is so staggering that it could reach as high as nine billion dollars. Amy Klobuchar says nothing until yesterday. And by the way, Stuart, she rolls out a plan, she says, to deal with the fraud. It's nothing but a bunch of fluff. And I would also offer it's all things that Tim Walz and the Democrats could have been doing for the last seven plus years to try and fight fraud. By the way, very interesting in her proposal. No cooperation mentioned with the federal government. Very interesting.

*STUART:

 Last one, Congressman. If the Indiana primaries were a test of Trump's power ahead of the midterms, do you think he passed the test?

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Oh, look, all of these polls that try to suggest that Donald Trump's influence is waning are completely false. Donald Trump has never been stronger, especially with the Republican base. And you saw it last night in Indiana. It's a he is a he's become more than Donald Trump. He is an icon of the ages. And when he speaks, people listen. And I know the left doesn't like to hear that, Stuart, but it's fact. And you saw it last night on display in Indiana.

*STUART:

 Yes, the MAGA held together and supported the president on this. I think his political fortunes may be on the upswing just a little. We shall see. Tom, Emma, always a pleasure. Thanks for joining us. We appreciate you being here.

*REP. TOM EMMER:

 Thanks. Thanks, Stuart.
